

My Museum

Objects are at the heart of museums. They are used to tell stories and offer links to experiences and people in the past.

Imagine you are opening your own museum. What objects would you collect and put on display to represent you?

This drawing of a horse is on display in my museum, Being Brunel. I drew it when I was 6 years old. What would go in your museum to tell me a bit about you?

Get creative!

Use the template on the next page as your Museum. You can either draw your objects in, do a collage or put the real objects on it.

Take it further by making your own museum in a box. Find an empty box and place the objects want inside. You could write your own object labels and invite the people you live with to visit.
